

RICARDO MONCHO

Ricardo Moncho is a licensed psychologist, facilitator, and executive coach. He facilitates executive and graduate level courses and teaches on various aspects of leadership development in North America and Latin America. His expertise includes: building trust and rapport, giving and receiving feedback, assertiveness, listening, collaboration, influence, conflict management, group dynamics and facilitation, crisis management, psychological assessment, and typology.

He has coached and counselled executives and other professionals in leading professional service firms and cutting-edge aerospace and defense industries, including: Via Sat, Caterpillar, Boeing, Solar Turbines, Northrop Grumman, Booz Allen Hamilton, NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratories, and Cal Tech.

Ricardo facilitates executive and MBA courses at the University of California at San Diego; he has a private practice in clinical psychology based in Pasadena; and he consults with the Los Angeles Police Department and Emergency Services in the capacity of mental health and crisis management. In the wake of hurricane Katrina, Ricardo consulted with the New Orleans fire department to help emergency services establish a crisis services program.

He holds a doctorate in psychology from Pacific Graduate School of Psychology and a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology from UC San Diego.

Ricardo speaks Spanish and English natively, and he plays hockey and tennis at a club level.